

About Wedding and Funerals

As in all the countries of the world, in Italy also people usually get married and die, according to well know natural laws.

Both the ceremonies, marriage and funeral, take place in a church, but while for the first one needs to be a couple, for the second one is enough only one person.

What is more, while women normally wear their sumptuous white dress for the wedding only, on the contrary men could wear without any problem the same wedding dress, strictly black and elegant, for their funeral too.

In both the ceremonies you can see people crying, even if for very different reasons. Someone has regrets also: the dead man regrets not doing something when he was alive, the bridegroom regrets something not doing when he was bachelor...

Finally, after the respective ceremonies, the newlyweds and the dead man get into a dark luxurious car and go away, the couple towards the reception, the dead towards the cemetery.

At the end of the most beautiful day in their life, in the silence and warmth of their bed, the groom and the bride dream of their honeymoon, an unforgettable travel wich they wish would never end.

At the end of the last day in his life, in the silence and warmth of his grave, the dead man also is dreaming about a travel, but he is sure that it will never end...
